I want to remove the need to manually start the tomcat server or jboss server as a "process" from a batch file. Does anyone know how to start the jboss server as a process? A: The easiest way is to use the systemd service manager (with or without Solaris 10 SupportPack-5) and the command line service manager. From man systemd-services: NAME systemctl -- Manage system services. SYNOPSIS systemctl [service-name] systemctl --help systemctl help [service-name] DESCRIPTION systemctl is a tool for managing services on Linux, like service control. /etc/init.d is a legacy for how to run a service manager named 'init'. So the script you're looking for is to replace all init.d related scripts with systemctl. It's not hard at all, and you can even use the.service files if you really like them. (Or you can download the systemd-init-service-on-sun_xenServer.service from Xen Server and put it in the appropriate place.) I first found this script by accident, and think it's safe to say it works: #!/bin/sh #mv jboss.service jboss.service.$1 #/etc/init.d/$1 start #mv jboss.service jboss.service.$1 #/etc/init.d/$1 stop #mv jboss.service jboss.service.$1 #/etc/init.d/$1 restart #/etc/init.d/$1 reload #/etc/init.d/$1 force-reload if [ -f /etc/rc.status ]; then cat /etc/rc.status fi if [ -f /etc/rc.conf ]; then cat /etc/rc. 1cb139a0ed
