Based on the book by Corey Mandell. Brilliantly acted..Q: Too many posts in a session I am getting errors like the following for a console application which enables users to post to a new forum in a database, and then listing the posts in the database. The program works in a way which allows the user to add a forum (and there are about 10 forums), add members to that forum, and add posts to those forums. It then prints a list of the posts and the number of members in that forum. It runs perfectly for one forum, but I get an error if I try to run it for more than one forum and it only prints the list of the posts and the number of members for one of the forums. I think the problem may be due to the way I set up my database. The fact that the two forum entries I do have work fine probably means that the other two entries won't be used. I think that I should have something like a forum_id in the database, which refers to the ID of the forum that the user is adding posts to. I think the problem may be here: public static void CreateNewDirectory() { MySqlConnection connection = new MySqlConnection(); connection.ConnectionString = "server=localhost;user=root;database=forum;password=passw0rd;"; MySqlCommand command = new MySqlCommand(@"select count

Personality traits and psychiatric morbidity in adults with congenital heart disease. Personality traits are known to be associated with psychiatric morbidity. Individuals with congenital heart disease (CHD) are subject to multiple life-threatening and long-term disorders associated with psychiatric morbidity. Since personality traits are heritable, we hypothesized that the expression of personality traits would be associated with psychiatric morbidity in adults with CHD. We explored the relationship between personality traits and psychiatric morbidity in CHD patients. We recruited 225 individuals with CHD and 135 healthy control (HC) individuals. Personality traits were assessed using the 20-item NEO-Five Factor Inventory (NEO-FFI). Psychiatric diagnoses were assessed using the MINI International Neuropsychiatric Interview. Individuals with CHD had higher NEO-FFI scores than HC individuals. CHD patients with a psychiatric diagnosis scored higher on neuroticism and lower on agreeableness and openness to experience than those without a psychiatric diagnosis
