The main character is a man watching another man who is running away from something. Don't you get it?!

You discover this by means of your HUD - a progress bar which is apparent for all of the available controllable objects in the game.

After all, it is not becoming prey. Anyone can do it if they want to - and the only answer the main character has is to run away from that miserable feeling that he senses around him.

An intriguing player experience with constant surprises

No mouse cursor, no second person perspective, no third person point of view, no hidden buttons - just a game that comes up with constant surprises that you must survive for it to continue.

If you do not survive, it all comes to an end and the player is confronted with its experience again.

At the outset, Precipice of Darkness offers the player two different game modes:

- "Story mode": Allows the player to control the main character at all times and see him in all his survival horror adventure;
- "Survival mode": Lets the player freely control the progress of the main character to their own will;

Both versions are available at the start of the game and can be continued at any time.

“Call me Maurice.” Minny shook her head in annoyance. But then she watched as Aura’s hand went to the folded leather purse, and she smirked. “It’s not his first time at the rodeo, hommie.” “You are incorrigible,” Aura said, her smile not disappearing. “But you’re right, and I will call him Maurice.” Her smile grew from ear to ear, and Minny chuckled. “I suppose the only other thing left to say is what is the book about exactly?” “It’s a guide to Hell, you say,” Minny said, still smirking. “The best way to find Hell,” Aura said, the smile now spreading across her face. Minny watched as Aura sat opposite of her on the top of one of the numerous geysers. Aura’s eyes watched the pool below the geyser but, as Minny looked down at her own boots, she was a bit shocked at their colour. Much lighter than any shade that Aura was currently sporting. “How did you get them?” Aura asked, lifting her own foot to point the toe at Minny. “They are amber.” “I know,” Aura said, the smile now leaving her face. “May as well wear toe-cleaving boots.” Minny blushed a bit under Aura’s direct gaze. “It is going to be an interesting couple of hours ahead,” Minny said. “Sister...
