The present invention relates to a heat generating apparatus, and particularly to a heat generating apparatus for generating a large amount of heat in a short time. The heat generating apparatus of the present invention is suitably used for a large-scale, heat generating apparatus such as a heater, a reactor for generating particles, a catalyst carrier, a crystallizer for crystallizing an amorphous substance, etc. As a conventionally known heat generating apparatus, there is an apparatus such as a heat exchanger, a gas burner, or a plasma generating apparatus, which uses heat of combustion, heat of reaction, or heat of plasma. However, in general, the energy of heat per unit volume as generated by these apparatuses is low. In order to solve the problem, Unexamined Japanese Patent Publication No. Sho-60-21538 suggests a heat generating apparatus using the heat of a fluid.

The apparatus according to the patent document includes a heat exchange chamber and a heat absorption member. The chamber is enclosed by an outer wall, and the interior of the chamber is divided into a multiplicity of heat absorption chambers by partition walls. The heat absorption chambers are formed of vaporizable heat-exchanging materials. The heat absorption member is contained in each heat absorption chamber. The heat absorption member is a porous ceramic plate having a large number of microspores therein. The microspores communicate with each other through capillary action, and the spaces among the microspores form a large number of capillary paths. In the apparatus of this type, the fluid (a heat-transfer medium) which serves as a heat-transfer medium is forcibly flowed through the capillary paths in the heat absorption member, and receives heat from the heat absorption
