FILE PHOTO: Mexico's Central Bank board member Enrique Nielsen answers questions from the media during an interview in Mexico City, Mexico March 18, 2019. REUTERS/Edgard Garrido The U.S. Treasury late last month began sending about $2.2 billion in economic aid to many countries, including Mexico, to combat the virus. "The CB has not asked for that money, and we know that the Treasury has neither requested nor received a request from the CB for the purpose of fighting this crisis," Central Bank (Banxico) Governor Alberto Ramos said. Ramos declined to elaborate. But the bank's predicament has been widely reported, particularly after the U.S. Treasury began to refuse to release the funds for months. Mexico's Finance Ministry and Economy Ministry said earlier on Tuesday they had made no requests to the U.S. Treasury for economic assistance. The U.S. Treasury said it would continue to make such investments on behalf of Mexico, after the Mexican Congress voted for the funds, according to a statement. Mexico has the highest death toll from the coronavirus outside China. The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services on Monday said the coronavirus had infected more than 1 million people in the United States, as the number of new cases in the country surged by more than 200,000 in one day. Mexican President Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador has said the country is making progress in its battle against the virus, which has so far infected 2,400 people in the country and killed 98. But authorities have acknowledged the crisis is "not over" and there is a risk the situation could worsen. As of Tuesday, the federal government had recorded 2,404

The traditional treatment of concrete walls which are exposed to a corrosive environment has been to first clean the surface of the concrete, prior to adding an inhibitor, in order to overcome the corrosive effects of the environment. However, it has been
