I love some good jazz drumming. I love some good drumming in general. At one point in my life, I imagined myself as the drummer for a jazz band. I want to be able to make a great beat, make people move, and make them want to move. That's what drumming is to me. And it is exactly what I bring to Shadows. The song is pretty simple — it's just piano, voice, and drums. That's pretty much it. I don't have much of an idea or plot for the story, but I'm going to keep writing. I went over the backing vocal in this song a bit. I could have recorded it in one take and it would have been fine, but I needed a chorus. In fact,

I need a chorus on every album. I need harmony. I've learned that the first thing you need to do is get the right voice. I should have recorded the chorus a few months ago and used it in my songs. It is late. This is an important post. Most of the work I put into these songs is done early in the morning. After a while, I find myself getting

---

caught up in feelings, and I want to let it all go.
In the middle of the week, it can be easy to get yourself caught up in the things that are not important. I had things like getting caught up in my emotions, and feeling like I needed to put something in every day.
So what do I do? I go home and play Shadow.
This happened last week,

and, honestly, it was the best thing for me. I had this song I wanted to put out, and I decided to write about it. I'm not done with the story. I am still working on it, and I might change my mind about how it ends, but I'm going to write it out and see where it takes me. Why is the story important to me? I am scared to put it out, and I am scared to make it bad. So I'm going to test the water. I'm pretty sure I want to write for a while. I like it. On a slow night, it was easy to fall into the lull that comes from not doing anything for a while. I put up the cover, and it to terrorise a city is to

---

give civilians the impression that they have no defence against the bully, or to make them feel powerless to defend themselves. If you run the risk of losing a job or losing a girlfriend or a boyfriend, there's even a corresponding increase in the inclination to commit violence. The trend-setting study that produced these results was written by a team of social psychologists at Binghamton University in New York and published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. It's based on the infamous Stanford Prison Experiment, the study that led to Stanford University's destruction of its own medical school. The experiment was an attempt to study a social phenomenon that has been disputed over much of the last decade, namely whether a group of people tends to become more aggressive when an authority figure exercises authority over them. In 1982, a study of prison inmates was conducted to determine whether a group of prisoners would become more lawless if a guard had been put in charge, a situation that would almost surely end in bloodshed. There were two groups of 11 volunteers, half of whom were told they were running an experiment and half that they were being sentenced. All of the men in each group agreed to shave off their hair, wash it, and wear identical white T-shirts.

The experiment started when the research team, led by Dr Philip Zimbardo, randomly assigned each convict to a cell that was either under the control of one of the researchers or under the control of one of the guards. The prisoners were told they were to act as prisoners under sentence of death for the duration of the test. In the end, of the 19 men in the sample, the researchers found that 10 were "depressed", four were "passive", and five were "aggressive". Of the prisoners in the control group, seven were depressed, one was passive, and one was aggressive. Of the guards in the control group, seven were "passive", eight were "depressed", and one was "aggressive". The researchers concluded that, even when controlled for a wide range of confounding variables, the guards were much more likely to be aggressive than the prisoners. Zimbardo has also insisted that the aggression came from the guards and not the prisoners, a claim that almost certainly has to be treated with the suspicion of wishful thinking given the statement by the study's leader that the cells "appeared to be more comfortable and humane". The experiment is infamous in the social sciences because it

---
