Chief executive Mark Zuckerberg says Facebook is looking to develop artificial intelligence to make sure its user data is protected. Mark Zuckerberg has outlined steps Facebook is taking to protect its users' data as it moves to develop its own artificial intelligence systems to prevent cyber attacks. Zuckerberg said Facebook was looking to develop artificial intelligence to ensure its user data is protected as the company moves to develop tools to make it more challenging for attackers to hack into its networks. As well as developing AI that will fight data breaches, Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg revealed that it was working to give all its 2.4 billion user profiles a sense of "humanness", to make their data easier to process and manage. Zuckerberg said the social network was hoping to be able to use AI to detect unusual activity in real time, in order to identify potential threats to its users' data. "We're looking at ways to use AI to make sure that our systems are really secure and that, if there is an attack, we're able to do something about it and keep people safe," he said. Zuckerberg was speaking to Congress on Tuesday as Facebook faced a grilling over the security of its platforms and what steps it had taken to protect the data of its 2.4 billion users. Tensions have been running high in Silicon Valley in recent months after US authorities accused Facebook of helping Russian agents use its platform to influence voters during the presidential election. Zuckerberg said the social network was also working to make sure that its reporting systems were effective, so that it could be alerted to suspicious activity in real time. In a separate statement, Facebook said it had been contacting
