“Without a doubt, isomorph is my favorite game I’ve played in the last couple of years.” – Indie Game Magazine, Top Indie Games of 2012 iObserve is a turn-based strategy game, where one player controls the defenders of the base, and the others the army that's trying to take it over. Taking place in a constantly changing map which can change drastically, the player has to make smart decisions in order to complete their mission. Similar to its predecessor, Cradle of Civilization, isometric, arcade style, turn-based strategy game which is very easy to learn yet hard to master. The game takes place in the era of the late 1930s, where the world is in the middle of the Great Depression. The aim of the game is to capture the enemy's fortress by controlling your soldiers and attacking them. As the current owner of the fortress you have to decide how to collect the needed resources to sustain your army and defend yourself against the enemy that is on his way to capturing the fortress. Pyry's journey is driven by a deep, dark mystery: Every 800 years, the souls of the dead rise from their graves in an endless bloody brawl in the city of Pyry. A researcher, the player must defend the city from their attacks and help the souls overcome the barriers they encounter. The game features a number of unique mechanics and a deep writing that has been praised by critics. The player takes the role of the craftsman known as The Sun, who in the course of his lifetime builds several pyramids that can attract the souls of the dead to his city. This unlocking comes at a cost, however, and the player's resources – the souls he has attracted to his city – are constantly dwindling. Because of this, it is important that the player carefully considers his decisions, as he can either help the souls overcome obstacles or end up making them more powerful. Death & The Diamond City is a mobile app based on the concept of "Where's Waldo?". Trauma: Undue Disdain for the Mental Health Community?

When I saw Mark Foley's name in today's Washington Post, my heart skipped a beat. My first thought? "Someone close to him has resigned!" Dead giveaway, right? Advertisement But then I read the report's subtitle, and I immediately started chuckling. The headline went a bit like this: "3 Ex-Congressmen Resign Over Sex Messages To Teenage Girls." Three resignations? Really? Well, yes, three. I mean, I might not agree with the men's resignations—though, to be honest, I'd be pretty appalled if any of them knew they were going to prevaricate a bit, especially the horribly inappropriate Congressman Foley—but it actually just struck me for the first time how severely my views on Capitol Hill are out of step with those who fund and direct the Public Affairs arm of the larger "blunt force trauma" shtick I've been trying to plug for the past year. See, I've been saying for quite some time that the singular problem with aspiring legislators is that they don't know enough about the general medical community—or, rather, the federal medical community. The private health care sector, including the federally-funded portion (read: the majority, designed to fund brain trauma), is dominated by industry lobbyists; thus, tell me again about how the service-disabled-veteran-run bill is going to pass even in the white-hot campaigning season that is just around the corner? Prove me wrong, Tom. Well, okay, you did, Tom, but the point is that you're not being correct about service-disabled veterans running the federal medical care system. Indeed, being correct about this is downright scary. We know that, this fall, advocates for the blind are preparing to open a winter campaign on veterans' health issues, and it's not going to be pretty. But won't the typical fixes—like sending some version of the current [monstrously-high cost] VA healthcare bill to the floor of the Senate—imply, at least tacitly, that the practice of “blunt force trauma” in Capitol Hill is a problem? After all, the euphemism has been that no evidence-based surgeries are ever implemented, and
